

Top-class performing horses are the result of a considered breeding program through many generations of the horse. Good horses are much more than a random copulation of a stallion and a mare but truly the result of the right combination of bloodlines and a good, healthy upbringing.

Basics must be ideal in order to develop horses for the top-sport. So, behind all good horses is a skilled breeder, not a coincidence.

To be successful in the equestrian sports it is not enough to be a talented rider. You need a good horse, and so it is not completely fair that the persons behind the horses, the roots of the sport, the breeders, are so invisible. Their names only seldom appear on the big screen during price giving ceremonies as they are today although their share of the sporting success is not insignificant.

So, it is really nice that with this ceremony we give credit where credit is due – this was only possible through the support of Longines for which we are very grateful.

For a breeder the WBFSH Longines Breeder Award is the highest distinction you can get.

Congratulations!
